It's more fast-paced than where I'm from (rural Virginia). There are lots of places where you can help, like Urban Ministries, counseling services, services for the homeless and disabled. If you don't want to live on the streets, there are plenty of places in Charlotte to help you get off the streets. There is a lot of religion in Charlotte, too. People fear God here.

There is so much to do in the region. The mountains are close enough for day trips, museums are nearby, the Whitewater Center is amazing, and we love the new parks (Romare Bearden, First Ward) in Uptown. It's great that we can take our son to a Knights game, walk across the street to Romare Bearden, then grab lunch at a multitude of nearby restaurants. I remember when uptown was a ghost town, so seeing it filled with people makes me very happy. There are also so many interesting neighborhoods that make up Charlotte and I love getting to explore the personalities of each place. I like that we can live in an area that feels like the "suburbs" without sacrificing the amenities of a large city.

I really like the uptown area. It is growing and there are people always milling about in the uptown area. I also enjoy that Charlotte is a large enough city to bring in some big names for Broadway plays as well as other performing artists. The Charlotte Symphony also does a great job at getting folks in the door who might not typically be interested. Another strength of the uptown area is the general feeling of safety in the area; Sports – the move of the Knights into the city, and the panthers in the downtown area are also a benefit of the city.
